Local Archaeology Topic of June Talk

There are many similarities between the development of Indian cultures along the Mississippi river and Neolithic and Bronze Age societies of rope and the Near East. While our attention often focused overseas we have a rich archaeological history here in our own backyard. Come learn more about this backyard with Bob Stumm as he tells of his adventures exploring the archaeological remnants of Mississippian cultures. Perhaps we can draw some conclusions about how these cultures were similar to or different from those we have studied in connection with ancient numismatics.

Are You Ready To Believe This?

A footnote to a history of Cicero published in the early 1700's: In the beginning of the sixteenth century, a tomb was discovered in the high-road near Terracina, which was called by the Romans Via Appia, and in it was found the body of a young girl swimming in a certain unknown liquor. The corpse had fair hair turned up with a gold buckle, and as fresh as if alive. At the feet of the body was a lamp burning, which went out as soon as the air came to it. By the inscriptions it appeared that it had been buried in that place fifteen ndred years, and it was supposed to be the dy of Tullia, Cicero's daughter. It was carried to Rome, and exposed in the capitol, where great crowds of people came to view it; but as the credulous multitude would needs have it to be the body of a saint, because it was not corrupted, the Pope ordered it to be thrown by night into the Tiber.

It Was No Picnic

The Punic war was no picnic but Dave Alverez's talk on the Mamertini was a reat treat. Thank you Dave for sharing your enthusiasm and knowledge with us one last time before beginning a new job in California. Good Luck.

Meeting Agenda

Read this carefully! Another change in the agenda has taken place. The agenda is "back by popular demand" to its original format.

7:30 - 8:00 Socializing
00 - 8:30 Presentation
30 - 8:45 Auction
8:45 - End More Socializing

It Will Be A Picnic

No, we're not planning the third Punic War - just our annual club picnic. Date and locatio have not been decided so please come to the meeting and add your two cents.

Summerfest

The Liberty Coin Club of Saint Paul is having a one-day "Summerfest Coin Show" on Saturday, June 21. The show runs from 10:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m. It's at Signal Hills Shopping Cente So. Robert Street in West Saint Paul. You can bet Don Doyle will be there. It's almost next door to his coin shop. Kenn Hollister will be sharing his table. Remember, any profits will be used to send two starving coin dealers to the ANA show in Milwaukee. Both Kenn and Don will feature pre ANA specials for their regula customers.

Calendar
